

CAMPBELL ISLAND

On 21 December 1969, we arrived at Campbell Island. As we entered the channel entrance to Perseverance Harbor, we encountered winds up to 30 knots. However, once inside and anchored in the anchorage just off the boat landing, the velocity of the wind dropped. What started out as a gloomy day turned unexpectedly into a very beautiful day. Cargo and six scientists whom we picked up at Christchurch, New Zealand were transported from the ship to the island by the ship's LCVP and both helos. All operations went smoothly and with full cooperation between the crew and island personnel.
