siderable more work for the division making it necessary to maintain a large and flexible organization ready to meet the changing conditions found on each separate voyage. In this respect the men of "W" Division have shown their versatility and capability in meeting and solving all the problems arising with the change in services for each new group of passengers. As a result our passengers have been pleased with the care they have received and the record of the ship has remained excellent.

In that period of the ship's history before the war ended, the men of "W" Division all had their battle stations, knew their job at general quarters thoroughly and carried it out to the best of their ability. Our stewards and steward's mates were assigned duties ranging from stretcher bearers and ammunition passers to an active position in a gun crew. And those gun crews which they constituted had a record of team work and efficiency which was unsurpassed on the ship.

In addition to their regular duties the men are assigned duties for fire, fire and rescue, collision and abandon ship. In the history of the Cape "W" Division has played an important, a commendable and a necessary role and the men who have made up this division can feel that they have rendered a fine service and contribution to the success of our ship.
