

Underway replenishment at sea, known to us as UNREP was probably one of the more demanding operations we encountered. Dangerous by nature it was often further complicated by heavy seas, rain, breaking lines and loose ammunition. These were matched by skill precision and plain guts. The rewards were simple: the ammo, fuel, mail and personal satisfaction of a job well done.

