

POLE-BOUND "QUE SERA SERA" BEING WARMED UP BY PRE-HEATER JUST BEFORE HISTORIC FIRST LANDING.

A NATURAL DEEP FREEZE

Antarctic cold worked mightily against the "lucky seven" who became the first Americans to set foot on the South Pole. (The story of the return take-off of the Que Sera Sera is a "hairy" one!) But the polar cold works for you sometimes. Witness the natural refrigeration provided the food storage at Little America V. A Navy man (at left) breaks out supplies in the food storage tunnel for transfer to the thaw-out room. These double-duty tunnels acted as safe passages between buildings and as protected warehouses for supplies.
