

Last crewman gets directions from Wellington Bobby.

Wellington

A week in Wellington! After over a month in Antarctic isolation, the anticipation of liberty in New Zealand's capital city was the only conversational theme aboard the Eastwind.

As the icebreaker slipped majestically into her berth at Clyde Quay, the beauty of the place struck even the most hardened salts.

At night, the city's lights were reflected like multi-colored jewels in the waters of the beautiful harbor.

During the day, balmy breezes thawed Antarctic-frozen marrow.

All too soon, though, the Eastwind was re-provisioned, loaded with cargo, and was ready once again to point her sleek bow toward Antarctica.

Wellington at twilight is one of world's most beautiful cities.

