

The refueling of Kulusuk on Greenland's east coast followed that of Itivdleg. We were able to accomplish this task in a shorter period than it had ever been done. Life was no different than before. It was hard work no matter where we ventured.

Hard work – except for our visit to Glasgow, Scotland. We unanimously agreed that we deserved a reward for our efforts. Our visit to Great Britain was equal to that reward. We will long remember the beauty of the country and the friendliness of its people.

Heading across the Atlantic we stopped at Angissoq, Greenland. The reason for this stop was to make a courtesy call on the Danish Loran Station located there. We knew what a change of pace meant to us. Our visit meant a lot to those who were stationed there, and you could see it in their faces.

EDISTO arrived in Boston the middle of September. Our trip seemed as if it had been to another world. The pictures that follow tell the story.
