

MORE FIFTH PLATOON

George R. Fulmore, Jr. -- George's idea of utopia is to take it easy and have nice babes at night. Unfortunately he was never able to fulfill it at OCS because he was on conduct II for 13 weeks. It was no trouble for him to get good grades but he always managed to chalk up demerits "I like it here weekends at the barracks", his favorite saying. This was usually followed by "Hey, do you have any sex books?"

Charles A. Garrett -- Soon after his arrival from Seattle, Wash., we all got our first glimpse of "Choo-choo". In reality, we accorded him an unfortunate and inaccurate misnomer. Choo-choo spent his past summers on tug boats. He was the engine. Sometimes when he wasn't feeling well, he'd be a rudder or a sidelight. But here at OCS, he was known for his part in the "Flat pick and henhorroid Singing Society" -- it was at that time that Choo-Choo won the Expert Pistol Medal.

Warren A. Greenlaw -- Warren holds one of the rare records at OCS. He lost the key to his security drawer the second week he was here and has managed to get by every Saturday room inspection without getting caught. Appropriately, Warren hails from Marblehead, Mass. He graduated with a B.A. in Psychology.

Ronald A. Hassell -- From Jacksonville, Florida, Ron attended Jacksonville U. and did graduate work at the University of Florida in Modern American History. He saluted Mr. Gomez during room inspection, earning his first 5 demerits. "Cheer up, Ron" we said, "things could be worse." The following week he threw $70 of his first month's pay in the trash to prove us right. Ron's two goals in life have been to win the DAR award for most academic improvement and to "punch holes in the clouds" at Pensacola.

Frederic R. Hildenbrand -- Fred is a living example of a course OCS should offer, but doesn't, voice projection. As Platoon leader he demonstrated his leadership ability and lack of a strong voice. "We can hear him say column left, but we can never hear him say march." Washington, D. C. is his home. He graduated from the University of Maryland with a degree in Sociology. Believe it or not, Fred joined the Coast Guard because he was tired of teaching school. We wonder if he will ever get tired of the sea!
