

Seamanship class is just around the corner. Here Gunnar Rawls explains to Snoof the necessity for blowing tubes, calibrating boxes, tightening glands that drip, and artusing the summer. While Mr. Broga lays out plans for an RTC cooking club, Messieurs Moore and Wetzel show Snoof their playground.

Seamanship, fount of wit, wisdom (?) and jocularity, was often an exercise in frustration. The dearth of practical work meant the laborious memorization of monotonously-presented material. Mr. Rawls, possessed of impressive knowledge and character, performed major surgery on our vocabularies. Messieurs Wetzel (the Coast Guard's Ed Sullivan), Moore (the Coast Guard's Pat Paulsen), and Broga (the Coast Guard's) were interesting and funny. Unfortunately, a script consisting of rules of the road, stability, and nautical terms made the whole act difficult to pull off.
