

GEORGE CARMICHAEL "The Snipe" was mysteriously assigned to general duty on a WMEC in Florida. He liked to instigate "violence about the decks," cock everyone's piece, and get to formations as slowly as possible. Plagued by a deep-seated Napoleon complex, he refused to let us refer to him as "The Penguin" in the class book.

JEFF CHARLET With the hills of San Francisco beckoning for his return, Jeff came to RTC to impart his California wisdom on the rest of the platoon. An eager worker, especially on field night, he found nothing too much to handle. Any job to which he is assigned will be done with vigor and determination—as long as he doesn't get stationed on the East Coast.

ROY COOK A lot of hard work has paid off for Roy in academics, but we still have not figured out how to square away his marching. Of course, Wizer's act is hard to follow, but that's exactly what Roy had to do—march behind Dean. The whole battalion is familiar with Roy's Tennessee twang and his daily hello, "The first exercise will be the high jumpah." WMEC Diligence.

FRED DICKEY Bravo One's own Gentle Ben. Fred's mild ways, however, have given way on occasion to savage attacks on anything that gets in his way. This includes people—from 2200 until he awakens at 0800—and of course pier pilings. The Guard is fortunate to have an officer like Crash, or will be when he makes that . . . one . . . last . . . pull-up.

PHILIP DIXON A Bible-belt swinger from Arkansas, Phil spent much of his time studying navigation, going to church, and hurrying to get his chores done. But he has the drive to perform his duties well, whether it be passing navigation or cleaning under the radiator. The Wizer tabbed Phil "Dolly" but there ensued such friendly warfare as to leave the whole question of a winner in doubt.

ALAN DOTY After he won the high port contest during indoc week, Alan became one of the platoon spark plugs, forever exhorting us to square away and setting the example. He got our marching into peak form while platoon commander. When satisfied temporarily, however, he lets an exceptional sense of humor loose, and livens us up considerably. It will be impossible for his ship, and perhaps whatever side of the country he's on, not to know he's passed their way.
