

Wherever we went below the Antarctic Circle there were always Penguins present.

We frequently collided with ice flows bearing a group of them.

They invariably dove in and swam through the water as birds fly in the air.

If you were lucky, you got to see a Penguin fly out of the water and land square on his feet.

We saw a lot of seals, too.

It was often necessary to salt the flight deck before flight operations because of ice build-up.

