

PALMER STATION, ANTARCTICA

Deck Force at work, unloading cargo

"Hug me please"

Palmer Station, Antarctica

LTJG Dowd steps softly, as not to wake sleeping birds

Polar Duke alongside to receive cargo from Glacier

Palmer Station, located on Anvers Island, Antarctica is one of the many Scientific outposts here at the bottom of the world. It provided Glacier's Deck Force one more opportunity to practice their cargo handling/offloading skills. In a few hours hundreds of pounds of general cargo, equipment, experiments and our Arctic Survey Boat were offloaded. The wind was brisk and the anchorage unsure but Glacier met her task in providing support to this small community. Palmer Station personnel ran Zodiacs taking crewmembers over to the penguin rookery affording everyone a "birds eye" view of our antarctic counterparts.