

The Ice

RIGHT: Adelle penguin. These were by far the most numerous types of penguin encountered. These curious birds walked, waddled and slid on their bellies for hundreds of yards for a closer look at the POLAR SEA and its strange inhabitants. Once satisfied, they just as deliberately turned tail and waddled, walked, and slid back from where they had come.

SS1 Tim Johnson and six other brave crew members compiled the POLAR SEA cross country ski team. It was a cold day and a fast run out the transition to Willie Field. The wind chill registered 35 below zero. A less than outstanding finish for the team, which took the last seven places.

ABOVE: The ship is moored at Terra Nova Bay for some ice liberty, some morale flights, a visit to the Italian station there, and also a few beers.
