

Engineering Department

Without the constant work and diligence of the engineers, Polar Sea would be just another vessel taking up pier space. Making sure the ship is capable of getting underway is vital to it's mission. While the engineers may not get to see as much daylight as the rest of us, what they do does not go unnoticed. Polar Sea couldn't very well be called an icebreaker were it not for diesel engines.

Right: Testing the viscosity of masking tape.

Above: FA Chris Davis mans the hose during the Davy Jones watch.

Above: MK1 Crockett, you have an arm growing out of your leg.
Right: FN Swanda ... Mister Congeniality.

