

Rabbit-rabbit AOS '94, lots of things to lots of people. Too much coffee and no barley soda. The great adventure north to end a string of deployments that started over a year ago and went from easiest to toughest. Fortunately, the crew was up to the task--performing at a level to boggle the mind. May not have always liked the "plan," but sure liked the fact that the engineers were up to the task, no matter when or what was involved. Like Forrest Gump said, "I got it in the buttocks." Thanks to you all, you're a good bunch of engineers.

Auxiliary Division

The Auxiliary Division, known as "A GANG", is responsible for providing "Hotel services" for Polar Sea. A Gang provides maintenance on the following machinery. Any electrical of electronic components, not in one of the 5 main spaces: this includes all HVAC components and their applicable assemblies, all A/C's units and assemblies, central hydraulic components, air compressors, both start and ship service, ows and all the F/W and Hot water components, sewage systems, steering hydraulic components, evaporators, emergency generator, most of the galley equipment, and all components associated with the boiler and steam system, and innumerable other components not directly associated with main propulsion.

"A Gang" is responsible for the completion of DCPO items in all of the auxiliary spaces, as well with upkeep and cleanliness of them. All this maintenance is done around all science operations, training, watches, drills, flighty quarters and anything else that seems to come along. This is done only through each individuals desire to be the best at what they do, through training and desire, together as "A-Team."
