

The process through the Canal is time-consuming. Before entering the first lock, the water level must equal on both sides.

As soon as the water level is equal, the gates begin to open. On both sides of the ship are camels which pull POLAR SEA along.

When the gates are finally opened, the camels pull the ship through to the next three gates.