

After they had seen the doctors the children were curious and inquisitive as usual.

Most were afraid of having their picture taken.

Superstition dictates that being photographed removes some of one's spirit but the influx of picture taking Americans had overcome this in the children.

This little fellow had mixed emotions. He didn't mind being photographed but he didn't seem to fully approve either.