

Entering the harbor we found the famous junks, both under sail and motor driven.

Shortly after we moored in the harbor, John Volpe, Secretary of Transportation, and Admiral Prins, the Fourteenth District Commander, welcomed Sherman to Hong Kong, and visited with those members of the ship's company from Massachusetts.

Some saw more than others and then again, some bought more than others. Much of it is quite different from what we are used to. The streets are not like the streets of our hometowns. There, the streets are full of people buying, trading, and selling merchandise and food, most of which is very unusual to us.

The smallest junks and sampans are driven by one man and technically have the right of way, but . . .
