

Many a story has been told about McLean's Wood Yard. Perhaps you recall freezing before a pot belly stove, or scrounging for bits of fuel. When Mr. McLean bought these old piles he got stuck — and so did the Coast Guard TRs.

On tour of post at Amoco. Guarding of oil reserves to protect against fire, accident or sabotage was essential duty performed by TRs. They released Regulars for such duty as amphibious operation and for manning transports.

Bright spot at Amoco. When the detail was large enough here's where you took your relief. That two Jima poster for the Mighty Seventh War Loan dates the picture.

Looking from Atlantic Avenue across harbor to B&A from Sargent's wharf, one of loneliest of posts. Here was unit for cold storage plant containing huge Navy food supplies.
